COMMUNITY is the most important word, best describing my approach to standing in this election for the City of Bunbury, where I have lived for more than 25 years.

As a photojournalist working in local, state, and international media, I have seen the world, realizing how fortunate and well-placed we are to become the jewel in the center of the state's tourism crown.

Bunbury is also the traditional center for trade and development, with our port important to growth in the South West.

I believe we must open ourselves up to tourism and trade beyond our region.

I have previously served on a Bunbury Council Committee, calling for a new art gallery.

I have been Chairman of the Board at The Intown Lunch Centre for 14 years, helping those on society's margins. I have developed an understanding of partnership and communication with many levels of government.

If elected, I will work to reconcile the community to deliver projects making Bunbury the region's leader and a world-class tourist destination.

We are blessed to live on a beautiful coastline, a wonderful place to raise a family, and ripe for growth opportunities.

My 25 years of living in Bunbury is spread over five decades, during which time I have seen many projects spoken about, many rumoured, and sadly too many fail!

Working in the media for over 35 years has given me the experience to see what's behind a story and ask questions about what is happening.

The government told us for many years that Bunbury was the centre of the South West, and both political parties told us that this town- now City, since 1979, would be the centre of trade and commerce. More recently, being told that we would have government departments, but of course, it never happened. With our busy ports, we are still a business leader in the South West, but our tourist trade could be at a different level.

I have been involved with the Intown Lunch Centre for 14 years and have worked with the government at all levels to help be a part of the success of that organisation.

I was on the City of Bunbury Art Collection Committee a decade ago. We were pushing for a new art gallery on the inlet foreshore. I will fight for a gallery again.

We need to include the tourism value of our fair and beautiful City. We need projects to rejuvenate our attraction to visitors. Be it an ocean pool, railway service to the city centre, or a new idea yet to be discussed. The choices are yours.

Governments are now looking further afield to generate opportunities.

I have lobbied the council to seek a connection to Europe, France, the village of Pozieres, to be precise. It would set our sights further afield and promote more significant opportunities for trade and tourism.

With your help, I want this City to realise the projects and plans that will transform Bunbury and the region into a centre for trade and a world-class tourist destination.

I ask you to vote for me at the coming election.
